Anne Anastasi (December 19, 1906 – May 4, 2001) was an American psychologist best known for her pioneering development of psychometrics. Her generative work, Psychological Testing, remains a classic text in which she drew attention to the individual being tested and therefore to the responsibilities of the testers. She called for them to go beyond test scores, to search the assessed individual's history to help them to better understand their own results and themselves.

Anne Anastasi - Wikipedia

Anastasi and Urbina's Psychological Testing is arguably the worst-written book I have ever had the displeasure of reading. The book is rife with arcane jargon that the authors never bother to define. This is a textbook, and, by definition, textbooks are supposed to explain their subject matter, not treat the reader as if he or she already knows it.

Review: "Psychological Testing" by Anne Anastasi. The field of testing has grown so rapidly that most contemporary books on psychological testing are either extensive and superficial, or intensive and incomplete. Anastasi's new college text achieves a nice compromise between these extremes. This is not a compendium of present-day tests, each briefly described and briefly criticised.

Psychological testing, 7th ed. Increasing attention is being given to the individual who is tested. The test user is encouraged to search for the causes of the individual's performance in that person's experiential history and reactional biography: What about the individual's background may help to understand that person's test responses and enhance the value of scores in predicting subsequent behavior—in school, at work, and in other contexts of everyday-life activities?

Psychological testing, 7th ed.

According to Anastasi and Urbina, psychological tests involve observations made on a "carefully chosen sample [emphasis authors] of an individual's behavior." A psychological test is often designed to measure unobserved constructs, also known as latent variables. Psychological tests can include a series of tasks or problems that the respondent has to solve.
